

Abstract

The invention relates to a device by means of which droplets can be produced from liquids having a different viscosity both in gaseous and liquid media. The inventive system is characterized by a nozzle which is devoid of moving parts, which has a modular architecture and which can be used both in gaseous media and in liquids.